Summary

I am Niloy Deb Barma, a committed and forward-thinking 12th-grade student currently enrolled at Cantonment Public School and College in Rangpur, Bangladesh. Throughout my academic journey, I have remained steadfast in my pursuit of academic excellence, technological innovation, and community leadership.

In my capacity as the CEO and Founder of both the AI Youth Alliance and the National AI Olympiad, I am honored to spearhead initiatives aimed at fostering innovation and excellence within the realm of artificial intelligence. This role resonates deeply with my passion for nurturing the next generation of AI leaders and problem solvers, a commitment that has been reinforced by receiving the Bronze Honor in the International Youth Math Challenge and participating as a Make an Impact Fellow.

My dedication to academic excellence has been recognized through accolades such as the Bronze Honor in the International Youth Math Challenge, which underscores my commitment to intellectual rigor and problem-solving. Additionally, my involvement as a Make an Impact Fellow reflects my dedication to driving positive change through education and innovation.

In addition to my leadership roles, I have actively engaged in blogging, community outreach, and technical positions at esteemed organizations such as IBM and Google. Serving as an IBM Techxchange Community Blogger and Google Cloud Innovator, I have leveraged my expertise to disseminate knowledge, facilitate discussions, and empower individuals within the technology sector.

Beyond my professional pursuits, I am deeply committed to volunteerism and social impact initiatives. My involvement with esteemed organizations like TED Translators and the Bangladesh Scouts has afforded me opportunities to contribute meaningfully to global understanding and community development.

Motivated by a relentless pursuit of knowledge and a fervent passion for positive change, I am enthusiastic about connecting with like-minded professionals and exploring opportunities for collaboration and mutual growth. Together, let us embark on a journey of innovation, leadership, and collective impact.
